The best way to ensure a predictable and consistent outcome is to model your business processes. An EPC flowchart is a business process modeling that uses the events and functions as key elements. It features symbols like rectangles, circles, and arrows to show data input and output. These types of flowcharts are used in software development and design. These types of flowcharts are best used for brainstorming ideas, especially when working on new computer algorithms. Moreover, each step in the flowchart is visually expressed, making it an excellent fit for troubleshooting common errors. Use Case Flowchart A use case flowchart or use case diagram is used to describe the interactions between a system and the external entities. EPC stands for event-driven process chain and is a graphic organizer that helps re-design business processes to generate better productivity in every area of your business. 11 Process Map Flowchart A process map flowchart is a visual representation of all the steps and decisions in a process. In other words, it's a detailed flowchart that can help you audit a process. These types of flowcharts are very similar to data flow diagrams or data flowcharts. Thus, making it a helpful tool to track information while controlling the implementations along the way. 6 Decision Flowchart Are you too indecisive about making a rational choice quickly? Since the diagram is simple in nature, you can use it as an effective communication tool for the stakeholders. 10 EPC Flowchart Your business process indeed includes a wide variety of activities. Shapes further indicate each step, and these shapes are connected by lines. Organizations with multiple departments primarily use swimlane diagrams to illustrate the cooperative business process. However, anyone can use these flowcharts to avoid confusion around who owns what part of a process. 4 Data Flow Diagram Data flow diagram, also called flowchart, is one of the most important tools for structural analysis and design of information systems. Use it for business analysis, agile development, business process re-engineering, system structures and many more. Since each process may be subjected to decomposition in this diagram, the relationships between the structural components in the same notation can be shown on the separate diagram.
