It's useful to know how to delete Google Search history, as well as details of your activities in its many other apps and services. You can delete your history in dozens of different Google tools, including YouTube, Chrome, Google Drive, and Google Maps. But let's assume you want to focus on Google Search today. Here is how to delete your Google Search history for the past hour, the past day, for all time or for a specific time frame. We'll also show you how to delete specific search queries. The steps below work the same in desktop browsers and on mobile devices. Note: The advice in the first section will delete all Google activity for that period, not just your search history. If you'd rather just delete Search queries for the past hour or day, skip down to "How to delete specific Google Search queries." How to delete Google Search history for the past hour or day 1. Sign into Gmail or your Google account. 2. Go to (opens in new tab) in your web browser on your computer or mobile device. (Image credit: Google) 3. Click "Delete activity by" in left-hand navigation bar. To see the navbar on a mobile browser, tap the three horizontal lines next to "My Activity" at the top left of the screen. Scroll through your call history to save contacts, quickly access the last number you called, or see who called you recently. The call history can also help you keep track of the number of minutes you have used. Access the cell phone menu. On a majority of the models, you can access the menu by selecting the "OK" or "Menu" button. Older cell phones might have you access the recent calls by selecting the "Options" feature. Find the phone call history by selecting "History" or "Call History" option. Some cell phone might give you options for "missed calls," "incoming calls" and "received calls." View the call history by scrolling up and down. The call log should list the date, time and number of each call. Highlight the call you would like to see more details on. The duration of the call should also be listed. Google Google has multiple tools that allow you to take control of your personal data. You shouldn't have to dive deep into the search giant's settings for a quick tidy-up, though. That's where Google's "Quick Delete" feature comes in, allowing you to easily delete the last 15 minutes of search history. The Google Chrome browser on your desktop browser and mobile phone allows you to delete browsing history in increments as small as one hour. But what if you don't want to erase everything that you've visited in the last hour? Maybe you just want to clear your most recent string of Google Searches. The Google app's "Quick Delete" feature deletes the last 15 minutes of your Search history. This includes not only the search queries, but also, any of the websites that you've visited from the Google app in that short time span. It won't delete browsing history from Chrome. RELATED: How to Delete Google Assistant Recordings To get started, open the Google app on the iPhone, iPad, or Android device. This feature is only available in the Google mobile apps, not on the website or in Chrome. Next, tap your profile icon, which is found in the top-right corner of the screen. From the pop-up menu, tap the "Delete Last 15 Min" option underneath Search History. That's all you need to do! The last 15 minutes of your Google searches and any websites that you've visited from the results will be cleared from your account. For a less hands-on method of cleaning up your information, look into Google's auto-delete options. RELATED: How to Make Google Auto-Delete Your Web and Location History
